Dovish Hike From BoJ Is Widely Discounted In The Markets ; Key Watch US/Japan Yields Spread :

The Bank of Japan is poised to end eight years of negative interest rates and shift away from massive monetary stimulus, marking Japan's first interest rate hike in 17 years.

Despite this, interest rates will likely remain near zero due to a cautious approach amid a fragile economic recovery. This move would make Japan the last major central bank to abandon negative rates, signaling the end of an era of unconventional monetary policies globally.

The decision is influenced by recent wage hikes and could be finalized at the BOJ's upcoming meeting. Exiting negative rates will involve setting a new target for the overnight call rate and discontinuing bond yield control and risky asset purchases.

The spread between US and Japan benchmark yields, currently at around 350 bps, has narrowed from its peak of 430 bps when the yen fell below 151 against the dollar. If this spread continues to shrink after the Bank of Japan's announcement, it could trigger a risk-off mode in Asia, which would be negative for the Rupee or the flip scenario works.

We will come to know shortly the BOJ's final move.
